Re: 1989 Yamaha PRO 50. Not charging? Thanks 99yam40. Got a manual. I see the lighting coil is the battery charge coil. The other coil is referred to as a charge coil. Pulled the green splice wire and separated what must be the Tach wire and the charge came up. Could be a bad Tach. In the mean time the motor made a racket and #3 cylinder blew.

I have been recently questioning the reliability and performance of the oil injection system on my 50hp. I have had the motor 12 years and am the original owner. It seems like it isn't using as much oil as it used to. As a result I have been adding some oil to my gas just in case. After reading Willyworm's Xpress project thread and seeing the pictures of his fabbed plate to cover the worm gear ...

Re: Yamaha Pro 50 problems. sounds like a gaulded piston when its cool it will turn over fine when it heats up it will start to sieze had a nissan that had good compresion would run great for about a mile or so then it would just start to slow down and die you could barley turn it over with the crank let it cool for a bit it would fire back up and run good till it got hot again.
